This is a book of pictures of modernist New Zealand homes.

These houses aren't new, they're old and lived in. They can be a little dusty, slightly worn around the edges and all have what antique dealers like to call "patina". But they're perfect in the minds of the people who live in them because of what they represent, which when designed, was a better way of living.

The image is a screenshot of a digital publication or website for the fashion group 247. The layout includes a large '247' logo in the top left, a vertical photo of a building with a black metal railing on the left, and a central image of a woman in a dark jacket with a pink floral pattern. Below this image is the brand name 'CHARLOT' in a large, bold, serif font. A white text box on the right contains the main message: '247 is a fashion group offering a range of services and expertise that is unique to the industry. We manage a portfolio of leading international fashion brands alongside groundbreaking new designers.' At the bottom right, a smaller text box states: 'More than a showroom, we actively support the next generation of fashion superstars. At 247 we directly invest in young'. On the far right, there is a vertical navigation menu with colored segments and labels: 'About' (white), 'Agency' (yellow), 'Ventures' (purple), and 'Activities' (red).
